

If You Pee on the Seat, I'll Scrub it with your Toothbrush. Love, Mom !!

Yesterday, many of us celebrated Earth Day on April 22nd. A day when we stop and think about how we can make our Earth a much better place to live and work. Water is the most essential nutrient for life on earth; it forms the basis of a healthy diet and lifestyle. The world today with its large, high-density population would not sustain life as we know it. There's a way to manage and purify our water for both drinking, bathing, in industry, and for the removal of human wastes. History takes us back to around 4000 B.C. in India when they used copper water pipes for construction of their palaces. And the Romans and Greeks stored water and Egyptians built elaborate bathrooms inside pyramids along with intricate sewage and irrigation systems. The precursor to today's amazing system of plumbing.

Over these many years, it has been documented that the plumbing industry has been a fairly male dominated profession. They have stood the test of time, and passed their skills from generation to generation. But what happens if you have a daughter and no sons to pass it on to? Today there are only a few women that even want to be in charge of a plumbing company, let alone know half that you need to know to do the job well. That is why Amber Sewell of Lutz Plumbing is one who stands out from all others. (Her great grandfather started the business in 1920).

She grew up around talking and working every day she was with her father. It was just part of their family discussion over dinner. She was learning so much about this business without knowing it. When she graduated from college, she got a job with a marketing firm, and off she went for about 4-5 years. As sometimes happens, there was some troubles that existed amongst the family ownership. They many times agreed to disagree. This lead to the split up. At one time there were several Lutz Plumbing companies that existed in Kansas City.

Amber, after several years on her own, came back and asked her father if she could come and start learning more about the business. It was at a time when he and a few employees were out working, and had no one to answer the phones and schedule appointments. She was ready to step in and help. She began working full time, doing all those things along with creating a public relations (PR) program getting the word out about Lutz, and started working her way up learning as much as she could every day.

Today she carries on the strong tradition of prompt quality service at a fair price. They provide the most basic of plumbing services for both residential and commercial needs. There are now over a dozen employees. They continue showing their future growth potential, but Amber still wants to try and maintain that personal business feeling. Amber works closely with her service manager to help answer her questions when prompted to assist. He does a great job doing this. She will continue to educate herself through classes and vendors who will keep her abreast of the latest technologies.

Lutz handles all your plumbing, drain and sewer, water treatment or testing, water heater, indoors or outdoors, even helping resolve DIY projects (we've all been there), or commercial plumbing service needs. Anything that even involves water, they're ready to serve. If you have ANY existing structures which has plumbing in it, then you are a good referral. This includes businesses, those that have rental properties, and contractors. All of their employees are Master Certified Plumbers (passing a tough examination). They have a warranty on both their parts and labor. They are on call 24/7, and have recently expanded their ways of reaching them both online and with newer mobile technology. You all know sooner or later it will happen - be sure to have Lutz Plumbing's phone number where you can find it. Amber – thank you for all you do for so
